(great, but in Portuguese - below translation)

"Yesterday I wrote here that The Uncle, the Croatian film, was the craziest film I had seen in this edition of the Fantastic Festival.

I was hasty.

Last night I watched the Polish Mushrooms and I can only say one thing: pray for those who pray that this film becomes available anywhere to be seen.

I wanted to watch another one after this one yesterday but I was so amazed that I couldn't watch anything else.

The film begins with an old lady, very witch-like, picking mushrooms and berries in the middle of the forest.

All cutely dressed, with her little basket, very concentrated, knowing where to go and what to get, until she sees 2 people lying in the middle of the bush from afar.

She tries to go back the way she came without making any noise but the couple get up, see the old lady and ask for help.

They are dressed in theater clothes, according to the two, because the couple was with a group of friends playing games and were abandoned by their friends and don't even know where they are.

So they ask the old lady to help them get to at least the village where she lives so they can get home.

The old lady, very suspicious, leads the couple on because she soon realizes that something is wrong.

And I don't tell you anymore.

I'm just saying that I became director Paweł Borowski's biggest fan, a guy who managed to ensnare me in a way I hadn't felt enticed in a long time.

To say that Mushrooms has a plot twist, a twist in the script, is to underestimate the genius of the script.

The film reminded me of a Brightwood film, which I saw at the Fantasia Festival, about the couple who run around and around the lake and can't get out. Never.

But not.

There is nothing recently released that resembles Mushrooms, neither in terms of aesthetics, nor in terms of subtlety, nor in terms of the intelligence of the script, much less because of the incredible idea that is very well realized.

Because it's not easy to have a good idea and first put it on paper and then put it in a film.

And, again, director Paweł Borowski is one of those people whose career we have to follow closely to be the first to see what he's going to deliver to us, because it's not easy for the guy to do what he did, the way he did it."

w ramach Off Camera nie pojawiła się żadna inna recenzja (oprócz tej na stronie samego festiwalu ale z niej mimo że również bardzo pozytywna to bym raczej nie korzystał bo nie jest to niezależne medium)

MACABRO

Nie wiem czy to można nazwać recenzją, ale zasięgi ma oszałamiające:
